

I object to the general or unlimited use of cell phones on airline flights. Separate talking and non-talking sections could be a solution but most cell phone users are too inconsiderate to be allowed to use their phones in such a crowded and restricted environment as the cabin of an airliner. Many travelers have to rise very early and travel far just to reach the airport. Others have work to accomplish before they reach their destination. I, personally, like to read and nap and would really hate to have people shouting into their phones all around me.
